Our work lasts a lifetime

We partner with people to advocate for the right to live with the independence they desire— one community, one family, one person at a time. The Arc promotes self-sufficiency and civil rights for people with intellectual and developmental disabilities through community partnerships, outreach and advocacy.

People with IDD and their families need varying levels of support and services throughout their lives. Our service resources are developed to meet those needs by providing sufficient support and advocacy while also promoting autonomy and independence.

Our role is to provide meaningful services and share resources and information with people with disabilities, their family members, friends, community partners and professionals.
